

Consolidate so you can Do More With Less

Microsoft 365 allows you to Do More With Less

Microsoft 365 can help meet every work-related technology need that your employees have, with familiar apps like Word, Excel, and PowerPoint—including web versions—as well as collaboration and communication apps like Outlook, OneNote, OneDrive, and SharePoint.

You can also save by consolidating point solutions and replacing third-party security and identity applications—including Microsoft Defender for Endpoint, email security, mobile device management, and remote access tools.

Avoid paying for redundant capabilities

There's no shortage of technology to answer virtually every work-related need, but this disjointed landscape of apps from different vendors makes it too easy for business processes to become fragmented across platforms, and that can add up financially. Some costs of digital sprawl are hidden if they're related to employee experience, time, and productivity. But simply consolidating to a single all-in-one platform eliminates the possibility that you're paying for redundant capabilities or overlapping services.

25% of executives say their digital ecosystem of individual digital applications and tools used by employees has a negative financial impact on their organization.¹

43% believe their organization won't understand the true cost of these individual applications and tools until they settle on a post-pandemic business process and workforce model.¹
